Almost two decades after Mao Zedong's death, an epic, no-holds-barred contest was waged in China between orthodox Marxists and reformers. With Deng Xiaoping's strong support, the reformers ultimately won; but they--and China--paid a heavy price. Here, Richard Baum provides a lively, comprehensive guide to the intricate theater of post-Mao Chinese politics. He tells the intriguing story of an escalating intergenerational clash of ideas and values between the aging revolutionaries of the Maoist era and their younger, more pragmatic successors. Baum deftly analyzes the anatomy of the reformers' ultimate victory in his brilliant reconstruction of the twists and turns of the reform process. New Scientist magazine was launched in 1956 "for all those men and women who are interested in scientific discovery, and in its industrial, commercial and social consequences". The brand's mission is no different today - for its consumers, New Scientist reports, explores and interprets the results of human endeavour set in the context of society and culture. This is the real time saga of this Pakistan-born former Police officer who was tracked down as an international criminal by three British Police forces operating in tandem, arrested, locked up and charged with criminal deception - all simply applying for jobs with them! Author Shujaat Husain, a double Honours graduate from the prestigious

Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the US (where he was a scholarship pupil in the 1970s), was harassed and defamed by at least 12 uniformed officers (ranging in rank from Chief Superintendent to PC) from across these nearly two years, and then for another five by their legal teams as he fought for justice singlehandedly - and won in the British Tribunals. Husain, in his memoirs, has brought about a scathing indictment of the institutional racism prevalent in the British Police and, to a limited extent, even in sections of the British Judiciary. This is a must-read given the culture of the present time. Husain currently lives in South London with his two grown up daughters and works as a teacher and examiner for several A Level subjects. Praise and Reviews '...by reading this book you have a better understanding of the police service and how it operates... of the issues involved in policing and what the challenges really are.' - R. Winterton, Chief Executive, Police Skills & Standards Organisation

The police service is undergoing rapid change and adapts to face the challenges of modern life. Careers and Jobs in the Police Service details these changes and provides practical advice on how to gain entry, the personal qualities required and describes the numerous career possibilities on offer - from local beat to CID, from fast-track promotion to civilian support roles. Illustrated by real life case studies, the book provides: job descriptions and entry routes; training and qualifications; practice examples of the police recruitment tests; where to look for further information. Complete with information on pay and conditions, equal opportunities and essential contact details, this book is an invaluable guide for anyone considering a career with the police. The book also analyses Mexican Transnational Trafficking Organisations (MTTOs) organised crime enterprises in Belize with special emphasis on human smuggling and the joint organised crime enterprises with politicians and public servants. The discourse of the book insists that the failure of the Belizean state to resist the assault of transnational organisations is the failure of its imported and imposed Westminster model of government to form an organic bond with the traditional colonial plantation social order since independence. And that the discourse of corruption is inadequate to the task of unraveling the reality of this Frankenstein monster seeking to pass itself off as a modern North Atlantic state. This book is a guide for anyone who is serious about submitting a successful job application. The Code of Federal Regulations is the codification of the general and permanent rules published in the Federal Register by the executive departments and agencies of the Federal Government. Prescriptive package detailing theoretical guidelines and practical methods for designing, implementing, and administering a neighborhood team policing program. The concept of decentralizing decisionmaking authority to meet increasing demands on law enforcement services is featured in this NILECJ prescriptive package. A practical guide for police administrators and planners, this manual provides a method of organizing police operations to improve police-community relations, increase crime control effectiveness, and enhance police job satisfaction. Chapter 1 is a summary of current knowledge about neighborhood team policing and a description of the system the authors believe would be an ideal neighborhood team policing system. Chapter 2 describes the neighborhood team policing programs of several police departments. Subsequent chapters suggest procedures for planning and implementing neighborhood team policing, administering an ongoing program, providing training and education, and establishing the structure of authority and methods of supervision of neighborhood teams. A practical approach for constructing a project plan is presented. Appendices include suggested operational guidelines, a format for team commander reports, a model request to obtain LEAA action funds, a case study of one team in New York City, a way of organizing a referral guide for police officers and a description of a training program implemented in St. Petersburg, Florida. Psychological theories and research have much to contribute to the knowledge and skill bases underlying effective policing. Much of the relevant information, however, is dispersed across a variety of different psychological and criminal justice/policing journals and seldom integrated for those applied psychologists interested in policing issues or for police policymakers/administrators and others working in the criminal justice area who are not familiar with the psychological literature. Designed to accommodate the needs of these different groups, this book addresses both operational policing issues and issues related to the improvement of organizational functioning by providing integrative reviews of psychological theory and research that deal with effective policing. It illustrates how the theory and research reviewed are relevant to specific policing practices. These include eyewitness testimony, conflict resolution, changing driver behavior, controlling criminal behavior, effective interviewing, and techniques of face reconstruction. The volume's readable style makes it accessible to a diverse audience including undergraduate and postgraduate students in forensic/organizational/applied psychology, criminal justice, and police science programs, and police administrators and policymakers. It will also interest applied psychologists whose primary focus includes policing and criminal justice issues. The book should draw attention to an often unrecognized and valuable contribution that mainstream psychology can make to the knowledge base underlying a wide variety of policing practices. the police service is currently ill-equipped to respond to possible and probable changes in increasingly specialised trends, political accountability, financial resources and the demographics of its workforce. This report covers reforms that may be introduced in the longer term. An earlier report on reforms that could be introduced in the short term published in March 2011 (Cm. 8024, ISBN 9780101802420) and made recommendations for savings of £1.1 billion over 3 years, of which are being implemented following a determination of the Police Arbitration Panel. This report makes recommendations which could realise gross savings of £1.9 billion with £1.2 billion reinvested in policing. The 12 recommendations cover: employment framework, entry route and promotion; health, fitness and managing the workforce; basic pay, contribution-related pay and role-based pay; negotiating machinery. Each chapter contains a recommended phased process for introduction. The recommendations will provide the police service with the ability to attract high calibre candidates with different skills and experiences, to maintain operational resilience by maximising the deployment of fit and healthy officers, and to manage office numbers according to need and in the public interest. Entry into the police service and advancement within would be according to the sole criterion of merit. The recommendations for reform of the pay review apparatus will have a profound effect, establishing a well-resourced professional pay body ensuring that officers' pay is determined on sound evidence.
